Background

After finishing school for interactive design, I began working as a junior front end developer for Active Website¹. One of my first projects was a webapp for Waste Management's internal use - as the project went on I moved from implementation to leading the design and UI for the project. Shortly after that I moved over to the marketing department as Lead Marketing Designer.

In March 2011 I began working for Zerista², my first project being a full redesign of the company's site. From there I lead a phased campaign of improving the usability and consolidating the markup of the product.

I began working for Orange Collar Media³ in October of 2011. Here I create eCommerce sites using the Magento platform for a variety of clients, including Bioware, Angry Birds, and Accessory Geeks. Since starting I've moved into a leadership role and now help plan and oversee projects for the other frontend developers.

Education

Art Institute Colorado
July 2005 - December 2008
B.A. in Web Design & Interactive Media

While in school I worked on a number of freelance projects, as well as design work for the school itself, including their 2008 Summer Studio website for prospective students.

Today, I still aid the Art Institute by participating in a Professional Advisory Committee that critiques graduating students, and provides industry insight to school staff to help them craft the curriculum.
